Sean Hannity and Kevin Sorbo-helmed faith-based film Let There Be Light to be distributed theatrically through Atlas Distribution Company

Los Angeles (July 31, 2017)--Fox News host Sean Hannity's first executive-produced film, Let There Be Light, is slated to launch nation-wide in theaters on October 27, 2017. Atlas Distribution Company will be releasing it. The film, directed by and starring Kevin Sorbo, who rocketed to fame in the faith-based world as the star of box office sensation God's Not Dead, is the story of an atheist who has a near-death experience that challenges his beliefs about love, God, and family.

The film also features music stars Dionne Warwick and Travis Tritt.

"Liberal Hollywood has increasingly moved the bar, making simple and honest films with solid faith and family values harder to find," said Hannity. "I felt compelled to start bringing quality films to the millions of forgotten Americans who want to see more of these heart-warming and entertaining stories that reflect our Judeo-Christian, all-American values. I've been honored to work with true talent like Kevin Sorbo, and I'm very proud of Let There Be Light."

Let There Be Light's brand new theatrical trailer will debut on Tuesday, August 1, 2017 on Fox News Network's Hannity at 10:00 PM EST.

"Let There Be Light is not just a great movie, but it really is the right message at the right time," said Paul Lalonde, whose Cloud Ten Creative Services is handling the marketing and promotions for the film. "Sean Hannity has really put his money where his mouth is and he's given every patriotic American and every Christian in America a movie worth rallying behind."

Kevin Sorbo's wife and co-star Sam conceptualized and co-wrote Let There Be Light with Dan Gordon (Highway to Heaven, The Hurricane). The three of them also produced the movie.
